The HUB Announces Newest Property: “The String Doll Gang”

The newly founded division of The Jim Henson Company will represent Kamibashi’s “The String Doll Gang” as exclusive world wide licensing agent for consumer products and entertainment

HOLLYWOOD, CA (May 11, 2009)- The HUB, the newly-formed division at The Jim Henson Company responsible for licensing products for third party properties, has signed on with Kamibashi Corporation based in Asheville, North Carolina to act as an exclusive licensing agent for THE STRING DOLL GANG, a band of kooky characters in the form of handmade string figures, each with his or her own special power that is always positive and helpful.

“The String Doll Gang” has been growing steadily since the initial North American debut in May, 2005 to now include over 50 unique characters. The HUB, led by Melissa Segal, Sr. VP of Global Consumer Products, will be securing licensees for THE STRING DOLL GANG for larger scale dolls, apparel, accessories, home furnishings, stationary, gifts, crafts, personal care, publishing, and video games. Additionally, The Jim Henson Company will also be looking to develop the franchise as an entertainment property for features, television and new media.

“The HUB is a perfect licensing agency partner for Kamibashi because of The Jim Henson Company’s long history of creating and developing dynamic characters across all platforms whether it be entertainment or consumer products”, said Segal. “THE STRING DOLL GANG has become an international sensation and is in over 1,000 US retail stores. The brand lends itself perfectly to an expanded universe of products for all ages and will only continue to rise in popularity.”

Each unique doll from THE STRING DOLL GANG collection comes with a woven fabric tag that won’t rip or wrinkle. The characters’ names appear on the front of the tag, and their special powers are described on the back. String Dolls currently retail for $10.00 each.

About The HUB
